Over the years, generations of the Fullgraf family have remained connected to Washington University. This connection dates back to the turn of the twentieth century, when records indicate Charles W. Fullgraf was a pupil at the Henry Shaw School of Botany, a department of Washington University. He received a certificate in March 1904 and embarked on a career in forestry and landscape design. In 1939, his son Charles M. Fullgraf earned a bachelor’s degree in chemical engineering from Washington University. He enjoyed a career with Procter & Gamble for more than 40 years, and his decades of service corresponded with the company’s growth from a soap manufacturer to a diversified, multinational corporation. He was named vice president in 1966 and was elected a director of the company in 1974. Mr. Fullgraf retired as group vice president of Procter & Gamble in 1982.

Charles M. and his wife, Charlotte, had two children, Jan Fullgraf Golann and Charles S. Fullgraf, and five grandchildren. Two of their grandchildren are alumni of Washington University: Hannah Fullgraf, AB ’08, and Douglas Golann, MBA ’16. In 2002, Charles M. and Charlotte created the Fullgraf Foundation, through which the family has established many wonderful gifts to the university. The foundation has supported the university’s botany department, scholarship programs for Arts & Sciences and the School of Engineering & Applied Science, an endowed professorship in engineering, and many other areas. The Fullgraf Foundation, under the direction of Jan Fullgraf Golann and Charles S. Fullgraf, recently committed to a gift of more than $1 million to support annual and endowed scholarships in Arts & Sciences and the School of Engineering.

The Fullgraf Family Scholarship Challenge

Scholarship support is one of the top priorities of Leading Together: The Campaign for Washington University because these resources help attract the brightest students to the university, creating a vibrant and engaged community of learners. Washington University currently provides more than $220 million annually in financial assistance to all students—and the need continues to grow. Jan Fullgraf Golann and Charles S. Fullgraf, directors of the Fullgraf Foundation, have generously established a $1 million Fullgraf Family Scholarship Challenge to inspire alumni, parents, and friends to support scholarships in Arts & Sciences and the School of Engineering & Applied Science.

In addition to helping exceptional students receive a world-class education, scholarships promote socio-economic diversity. The learning experience for every member of the Washington University community is strengthened and enhanced when students encounter a rich variety of ideas and perspectives and work together to solve problems.

The university’s goal is to ensure that no qualified student will have to turn down a Washington University education because he or she cannot afford to attend. Your gift to the Annual Fund will help open doors of opportunity for exceptional students from all backgrounds, offering them a chance to fulfill their extraordinary potential and achieve their dreams.

How the Challenge Works

The Fullgraf Family Scholarship Challenge will match new or increased Annual Fund gifts and multi-year pledges designated to scholarship support in Arts & Sciences or the School of Engineering & Applied Science. The challenge will benefit both undergraduate and graduate students.

Your gift Match provides
